Two decorated ex-Navy SEALs pass along wisdom earned on the battlefield, but these lessons aren't just for wartime. Jocko Willink and Leif Babin's principles are ones that any of us can apply to professional and personal situations. In gruff, no-nonsense tones, the co-authors lay out leadership strategies that are all about owning your daily decisions, even if it's just choosing where to go for a team lunch. Some of their advice isn't what we'd expect—they explain why over-severe discipline can be counterproductive—and it's not as macho as it might sound. The idea is to make your coworkers trust your decisions. It's like having your own personal drill sergeant. Listen any time you need motivation.
